LATEST OFFICIAL REPORTS ON WAR

The sea of mud before Ypres has temporarily stopped the British advance, whilst from the other fronts no of any importance has been published

The one scene of activity at the moment is the islands in the Gulf of Riga, where a German landing has been effected under cover of warships. The information complete, but it appears that the Russian batteries on Dagoe Island were destroyed by the fire from the German ships, and that simultaneously landing of the troops on Oesel Island was effected. Whether any serious advance, is contemplated, or whether the Germans are merely securing their position in Riga for the winter so as to entrench themselves and to make it coubly hard for the Russians to advance in the spring, remains to be seen. But it seems improbable that any further serious advance on Petrograd will be undertaken so late

We Do Not Permit You To Make a Mistake

A mistake made in the selection of a piano or a talking machine is likely to be costly. By dealing ONLY in instruments that we know to be right, we make it impossible for our customers to go wrong.

That is why we can—and do—guarantee lasting satis-faction with every instrument purchased from us. If anything goes wrong it is our mistake, not yours and consequently our loss, not yours.

In forty-three years of piano selling we have not had one complaint that we have failed to rectify.

WORK OF CONGRESS

BALTIMORE, Md.—Maryland's representatives in the Senate and the House of Representatives, with the close of the famous "war" session of Congress, all agree that the entire work of the two bodies was the most momentous and far-reaching in the history of the nation. It will be regarded as the greatest session ever held by Congress, says the News.

In formal statements the Maryland men extol the work of the two bodies, especially the war measures that have been enacted.

The Russian Government has been authorized to draw upon the United States Treasury for $275,000,000, all of which will be spent here for war supplies. Of this sum, $97,500,000 already has been disbursed. The interest of this Government, according to State Department officials, is not simply to safeguard this loan, but to assure itself as far as possible that the armies of Russia, an ally of the United States, are supplied with 100 cents' worth of gunpowder, shot and rifles for each dollar spent.

Nobody connected with the g ment could be found who was willing to discuss the situation. Members of the Administration appear satisfied that the Russian officials should handle the affair as they deem fit. It was specifically denied at the

The evening sky for the southern hemisphere

The map is plotted for the latitude of Southern Africa and Southern Australia, but will answer for localities much farther north or south. When held face downward, directly overhead, with the "Southern Horizon" toward the south, it shows the stars as they will appear on Nov. 6 at 11 p. m., on Nov. 21 at 10 p. m., on Dec. 6 at 9 p. m. and on Dec. 22 at 8 p. m. The boundary represents the horizon, the center the zenith. For convenient use, hold the map with the part of the boundary down corresponding to the direction one faces. The lower portion of the map thus held shows the stars in that part of the sky according to their relative heights above the horizon. The names of planets are underscored on the map.

THE cost of retailing is larger than it should be by reason of the fact that relatively few women begin their shopping before the middle of the day.

The majority of the salespeople who must be on hand to carry the 'peak load' of the afternoon are comparatively idle in the morning hours, and conservation of labor, so essential in these times, is hard to attain.

Your co-operation in this respect is confidently expected. Morning shopping will result in greater economy — and in the greater satisfaction which comes from making thoughtful, unhurried selections.

> LONDON, England-Although the accumulation of orders over the weekend was light because of the subscriptions to the new National War Loan the stock exchange markets generally were steady today. Business was quiet. Money was in demand. About £2,000,000 was disbursed in dividends

> The gilt-edge section was hard. The week's full sales of the National War bonds will be announced tomorrow. Americans were idle pending the resumption of trading at New York.

> Canadians were maintained. Reports that the strike had been settled made the shares of Argentine roads strong.

Home lines were narrow and mixed. Allied bonds were cheerful. Russians were sustained, the better position of exchange offsetting the war news. Peruvians were in demand. Mines

C. F. & G. W. Eddy, Inc., of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, received 14 the following from their Chicago correspondent:

Corn-Firmer technical position asserted itself in the corn market, with the ton generally firmer than expected. After an easier opening prices made a moderate advance. There was very little selling pressure, despite good weather for curing the crop, and more peace reports and reiteration of last week's bearish advices concerning retention of maximum prices on corn futures, and the Government's disapproval of bull speculation. The buying today was principally for shorts. It is claimed that much depends on the willingness of farmers to sell. The cash corn premiums should bring out some fair offerings while the car situation might be an important factor against a burdensome movement. State reports continue to show enormous corn production. Toward noon prices sold off to the day's low on heavy commission house selling. Oats-The selling pressure in the market was much under expectations. Buying was credited chiefly to shorts who have not made as much progress recently as was expected. Further export buying is expected. On the basis of the oats crop as a whole, the buying is not regarded as important, but coming at this time, when the crop movement is smaller than looked for the effect is greater. The predictions of December selling over May in the Chicago market are still heard. A fair increase in the visible is expected today. Prices later eased with corn on reports of unfavorable export demand.

STEEL ORDERS CUT SURPRISE

Decrease in Unfilled Work Expected to Be Considerably Less Than 573,000 Tons Reported-Will Bring Relief

The decrease of more than 573,000 tons in the unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation came that the loss would be considerably below the 500,000 tons average of the last two months, and those who have mates in the past, did not look for a drop of more than 200,000 tons.

While it was known that domestic business was on a very limited scale during September, it was the opinion in the trade that government contracts were placed in sufficient vol ume to bring the decrease in orders down to a much lower figure than was actually shown.

It is the opinion that the govern ment orders placed last month were not as large as has been estimated. but those who study steel conditions assert that some big order might be expected this month and this might stem' the tide of decreases for a time. Steel trade interests look for specifications by the Government within the next 60 or 90 days covering orders ently there is only small relief in sight net profit to 25 cents per barrel of for 7,000,000 tons of steel. When mill.

MATTRESSES last longer, are sweeter and Quilted Mattress Pads

Made of two pieces of heavy bleached white muslin—both sides quilted—with dainty snow white waiding of the best grade between. They can be washed easily without losing their light, fuffy texture or their attractive whiteness. Mothers teadily appreciate their usefulness—they keep babies' cribs absolutely dry and sanitary. They are made in all sizes to fit any bed or crib.

Christian Science leaves no man in any doubt as to the true nature of in proportion to its coincidence with God; and this being so, no man should remain in doubt as to what is meant In the nineteenth chapter of Luke by "the reflection and demonstration is recorded the parable of "the of divine Love" of which Mrs. Eddy pounds," as it has been called. A speaks. Writing on page 3 of Science nobleman, requiring to leave his do-main for a time, calls his servants to-Science says: "The Divine Being is not the image and likeness of the together lovely;' but to understand mands absolute consecration of thought, energy, and desire."

Christian Science brings out the fact that man is the image and likeness of God. What is an image or likeness? It is a reflection of something; and the image is distinct or the reverse exactly as it is without blur. Now God is perfect. God is Mind and in Mind all reality exists. Spiritual man is therefore the perfect image or likeness of perfect Mind, of God. To get a little understanding of this is to begin to see the unlimited nature of spiritual man. And with the understanding comes that devotion to Truth which of a certainty is rewarded.

"But to understand God is the work of eternity." There never can be an end to the knowing of God. God's spiritual creation will continue to unfold itself throughout eternity. As the unfolding goes on the erroneous sense of creation will disappear, with all its accompanying false material pains and pleasures, disappointments, sins and diseases, until all the evidence of mortality is finally lost. And Christian Science explains all this, for it knows that only the unreal can pass away, while the real continues as the expression of perfect Mind.

If Authors Could Reply to Their Critics

Giving it as his deliberate opinion that an author ought to be allowed to reply to a misrepresenting review, Mr. Howells wrote some years ago:

"In any other relation of life, the man who thinks himself wronged tries to right himself, violently, if he is a mistaken man, and lawfully, if he is a wise man or a rich one, which is practically the same thing. But the author, dramatist, painter, sculp-tor, whose book, play, picture, status has been unfairly dealt with, must make no effort to right himself with the public; he must bear his wrong in silence; he is even expected to grin and bear it as if it were funny. Everybody understands that it is not funny to him, not in the least funny, but everybody says that he cannot make an effort to get the public to take his point of view without loss of dignity. This is very odd but it is the fact, and I suppose it comes from the feeling that the author, dramatist, painter, sculptor, has already said the best he can of his side in his book, play, picture, statue. This is partly true and yet if he wishes to add something more to prove the critic wrong, we do not see how his attempt to do so should involve loss of dignity. The public, which is so jealous for his dignity, does not otherwise use him as if he were a very great or invaluable creature."

"I should say that he lost dignity or not as he behaved, in his effort to right himself . . . If he betrayed a wounded vanity, if he impugned the motives and accused the lives of his critics. I should certainly feel that he was losing dignity; but if he temperately examined their theories, and tried to show where they were mistaken. I think he would not only gain dignity but would perform a very useful work."

The Larger Patriotism

In forming the new National Ministry in Canada, Sir Robert Borden has done a fine thing, and done it in a great way. It will not be disputed, it is to be imagined, by anybody, least of all by a Canadian, that party feeling runs particularly high in the oldest of the Dominions. It has been the rule in Canadian politics for the winner to take his pound of flesh, and anything over and above the pound which might be within his power. In a great national crisis, Sir Robert has broken through tradition. He has gone back to the golden age of the Roman Republic, when none was for a party, when all were for the state. In plain English, in the very height of his power, he has formed a National Ministry in which the offices are divided equally between his own party and the Liberal

The example is one which it is to be trusted will hold good in all future party warfare. Not, that is to say, in the necessary continuation of fusion ministries, but in the willingness of political opponents to introduce into party warfare something more of humor and good nature than has been formerly the wont. For, it has to be acknowledged, that Sir Robert has not taken this step to save his political life, or to secure his political influence. There has probably never been a moment when he could have gone to the electors with a greater security of their endorsement of his policy, and the return of his supporters to Ottawa. More than this, it is recognized that he need not have appealed to the country at all, since he already had been assured of the confidence of the House in the shape of a resolution authorizing him to continue the present Parliament. In spite of this he determined, and most people will agree determined rightly, that the hour of the present war was not a time when a man should hold power by reason of an existing parliamentary majority, or under any aspersion of unconstitutionalism. The moment, therefore, that the Liberal members of the House showed an inclination to support Sir Wilfrid Laurier in challenging the Prime Minister's right to consider himself the nominee of the nation, they must have realized they were going to bring about a party struggle. Sir Robert refused to be contented with the decision of the majority, and determined rightly that he would hold his commission from the

He determined, however, at the same time, that he would do everything in his power to avert a party conflict. He decided, therefore, once more to renew the offer, which had been rejected, to form a coalition ministry with the Liberal Party, after the manner which has been adopted in France and in the United Kingdom. He, con-sequently, offered half the offices in his Cabinet to those members of the Liberal Party who had arrayed themselves with him in the pursuit of the larger patriotism. The policy adopted was in the nature of a self-denying ordinance, for the great majority of the Conservatives might itself not unjustly have led to a claim of a majority of offices. Such an idea, however, was entirely foreign to pert's concept of a united nation. He offered half of the Cabinet offices to that section of the Liberal Party which was willing to coalesce with him, and that offer was accepted. The result is the formation of the Cabinet, the members of which were announced on Saturday last.

The people of Canada will now, consequently, make their decision at the polls with the inspiration which Sir Robert has given them to unite as one man in seeing the war through. Nobody can have any particular doubt as to what is likely to be the result. The emergency legislation necessary to eliminate the votes of any alien or antinational elements in the country, and to safeguard, so far as possible, the interests of the men at the front, has been passed by the House. This legislation itself, it is to be imagined, would have secured Sir Robert from defeat, even if there had been any prospect of his defeat, of which there has at no time been any serious indication. But the great gain, as the Montreal Star plainly points out, is that "the genuinely patriotic people of Canada will be very glad to get rid of a real war elec-tion." That truly is what Canadians with the larger view see. It is ridiculous to pretend, as a few papers are pretending, that the coalition has meant the betraval of their party by the Liberals who have entered the Cabinet. The ame sort of thing was said with equal futility in France and in the United Kingdom, in the earlier stages of the war. Men, however, in those countries, have ceased to trouble particularly about parties for the time being, with the result that some amazing Cabinets, from the point of view of combination, have been formed. What is really troubling those Liberals who are dissatisfied is, it is to be suspected, the very thing which the Montreal Star, itself a Liberal paper, joyfully points out, namely, that "with so large and influential a section of the Liberal Party represented in and supporting the new Union Cabinet, the necessary election of members to the House of Commons becomes largely a formality in a decisive majority of the

It is hard to get away from the prejudices of a lifetime. But when once these prejudices have been overturned, people find that Liberals and Conservatives, Radicals and Conservatives, are made of very much the same clay. At this precise moment, Mr. Lloyd George is presiding in London over a War Cabinet which contains numbers of men, who, in days gone past, would have thought it a thing incredible that they could be on any political terms with the author of "Limehouse." After a time the politicians of Canada will discover that what has become possible to the Liberals and the Conservatives of the United Kingdom, and to the various groups of the Right and Left in France, should be of easy digestion to themselves. When this comes about the acidity of Canadian politics will have been greatly mellowed, and the interests of the country will be discovered in no way to have suffered in the process.

The Nearest Duty

THE task lying nearest the people of the United States at the present time, the task of the most immediate importance, is that of taking up the second Liberty bond issue. So much is dependent on the success of this loan that, for the time being, all other questions and undertakings must be made secondary. It is not going too far to say that the success of the loan is vital to American prestige before the world. To permit the loan to fail would be a severe disappointment to the Allies of the United States; it would proportionately rehearten the enemies of democracy, whose fortunes are now so manifestly on the decline, and it would assuredly tend to postpone the return of peace. As a matter of national obligation, national interest, and national pride, it must not be allowed to fail.

There exists nowhere the slightest doubt as to the ability of the people of the United States to support their treasury by subscribing, and greatly oversubscribing, the amount required; if they should fall short of meeting the call it would certainly, and naturally, be attributed to their unwillingness. How could this be reconciled, assuming the possibility of such a contingency, with the emphatic and universal popular demand upon the Government, a demand which gained strength every hour from the invasion of Belgium until it became irresistible, in the spring of 1917, that, in the name of humanity, war be declared upon German autocracy? How could it be reconciled with the satisfaction and enthusiasm with which that declaration was received from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Lakes to the Gulf? President Wilson did not act hastily. His patience actually tried the temper of the country. He was ready to act at any time, but he refrained, despite the clamor all around him, until he felt that the sentiment of the whole nation was for war. He followed rather than led. He had a right to believe that the people would stand by him "to the last man and to the last dollar."

Has the nation a thought of deserting him or his Administration, of leaving the Government in the lurch, of abandoning its allies, of turning its back upon democracy, of bringing humiliation upon its name, and dis-grace upon its flag? Assuredly not. The nation is as firm today in its attitude toward the war, and as fixed in its determination to assist, to the full extent of its ability, in the winning of the struggle, as it was six months ago. Its people, however, taking them in the mass, have apparently become indifferent as to details, and have seemingly fallen into the mistake of passing their individual obligations and responsibilities to Washington, on the assumption that, having been granted all the power it has asked for, the Government can do everything, and do it automatically. They are willing to pay any tax that comes within their ability toward the carrying on of the war; they are ready to serve under the colors; they are prepared cheerfully to obey orders; but they are slow in taking upon themselves, voluntarily, the performance of such a simple duty as the buying of a bond. This is not due to any weakness in their patriotism; strange to say, it is a result of their unlimited confidence in the ability of the country to accomplish whatever it sets out to do, without let or hindrance. The average American citizen apparently does not see how individually, and in his small way, he can do much for the stupendous cause which the nation has made its own, unless he is ordered to do some-

There must be a general and complete awakening from this misconception of personal obligation among American citizens during the next two weeks, if the second Liberty bond issue is to be wholly successful. The Government at Washington can do much when backed by the people; without this backing it can do little or nothing. The moral effect of popular support counts for a great deal. It is to the course of the American people, rather than to the course of their Government, that Germany is looking most keenly and anxiously at this moment. It is known to Berlin, as clearly as it is known to New York, that upon the success of the second great bond issue hang momentous consequences. If it is established bevond peradventure that the American people are behind their Government in the declaration that peace is impossible until the world is made safe for democracy, it is at least reasonably probable that the revolution which is brewing in the German Empire will find expression, and that the question of ending the war will no longer rest upon the will of Kaiser or military caste.

The President, his Cabinet, and all who share his confidence realize full well that nothing, at the present time, may rightfully take precedence of the bond sale. It is for this reason that a Liberty Bond Day has been proclaimed for Wednesday, October 24, and that a change has been made, by the authority of the Executive, in the plan for devoting the week of October 21 to 27 to the food-pledge campaign. This campaign has been set forward to the week beginning October 28, so that there may be no conflict with the final stage of the Liberty Loan drive.

Two weeks remain in which not only to make good the deficit now visible in subscriptions, but to bring the total up to a point where there can be no further doubt, in any part of the world, as to where the people of the United States stand on the question of pushing the war to a speedy and victorious conclusion.

The State and Research Work

In a memorandum which was issued by the British Science Guild, about a year ago, it was stated that, whilst the United Kingdom had not been behind other nations in its achievements in the field of original research," "the capacity of British talent had been impeded by the neglect of the state to encourage and facilitate investigation and to promote cooperation between those engaged in industry and those engaged in research." During the last year, a great deal has been done to remedy this defect, and the British authorities have taken up the question of research with an energy which is already bearing good fruit. The report of the Advisory Council of the Privy Council Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research for 1916-17, which was published recently, is, indeed, full of promise for the future. Already, it appears, substantial progress has been made towards the encouragement of national research, in such important industries as that of cotton, and in the woolen and worsted manufactures, by establishing a national research association, whilst Irish flax spinners have, it is stated, decided to take a like step. The council, the report says, has also been approached by the representatives of various other trades, with the result that many of them have decided to form research associations, and others are seriously considering the question. In certain instances, the state is making substantial grants towards carrying on research work, especially in those fields in which direct results, in the way of increased trade and manufacture, are not to be looked for.

One of the foremost questions in the matter is, of course, that of the attitude of the state towards inventions and inventors, and in this regard the council would seem to have come to a wise decision. Where money is needed for the introduction or exploitation of the patented process or device, assistance is not to be given. On the other hand, where funds are required for working out, on a full scale, a process or device already patented, it is considered that a grant may be properly recommended.

As far as the traders and manufacturers themselves are concerned, the great need is cooperation, in the fullest sense of that word, and the chief obstacle in the way of full cooperation is the "trade secret." In certain cases, the trade secret is a very real and wholly legitimate asset, but the anxiety which guards a trade secret is often made to extend to all manner of information, which every trader, including the one possessing it, would be the better for sharing. It is a narrow, and consequently distorted, view of the question to imagine that ultimate success in business is dependent on chance advantages. Such adventitious helps can, of course, never in the long run compete with the ability to recognize opportunities which are always coming, and the readiness to take advantage of them. Improved methods help every one, and nothing secures and establishes the improved method so quickly as cooperation, and that eminently sane trade policy which may be summed up in the phrase "pooling

The U.S. Army Rank of General

THE revival of the rank of General in the United States Army, primarily with the purpose of raising the grade of the commander of the American expeditionary force in France, Major-General John J. Pershing, to correspond as nearly as possible with that held by the chief commanders of the British and French forces, and, secondarily, to bring the grade of the chief of staff, Major-General Tasker H. Bliss, to equality with that of a technical subordinate, recalls the fact that, from its beginning, the Republic has been chary of the bestowal of high military honors. The nation has never before, in like circumstances, conferred such honors as those now held by General Pershing and General Bliss. In the Revolution, the Continental Congress made no attempt to grade the commanding officers. It simply accepted as their titles those conferred by the different States. George Washington was designated Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Armies. Not until 1798, when war with France was apprehended, was the title of Lieutenant-General created and conferred upon him. On March 2, 1799, a law was enacted which declared that "a commander of the army of the United States shall be appointed and commissioned by the style of 'General of the Armies of the United States." This abolished the office and title of Lieutenant-General, and gave Washington the higher

After Washington, there was a decided reaction from militarism. The act of March 16, 1802, made provision only for a single general officer of the army, and that one a Brigadier-General. In the war of 1812-15 numerous general officers were necessarily appointed, but none was made to rank above a Major-General. With the return of peace, and public confidence in its indefinite continuance, Congress, on March 2, 1821, provided that the command of the regular army should lie with one Major-General and two Brigadier-Generals. There was little, if any, change from this until the Mexican War, when, in 1846, the President-was authorized to add one Major-General, Zachary Taylor, to the single incumbent of that rank, Major-General Winfield Scott. In 1855 the grade of Lieutenant-General, by brevet, was revived by Congress, with the purpose of acknowledging "the eminent services of a Major-General in the late war with Mexico." This had reference to General Scott.

From the beginning to the close of the Civil War, of course, there was much making of general officers. It became at once necessary to raise lieutenancies to captaincies, captaincies to colonelcies, and to give brigade and higher commands, with corresponding titles, to scores of West Point graduates and volunteers who could prove their fitness for such responsibilities. Grant, it will be remembered, was a retired Captain at Galena when the war broke out. On March 2, 1864, the grade of Lieutenant-General, never before conferred upon any American officer save Washington, was voted to the silent soldier. The war was over, and the nation had begun gratefully to settle down to the ways of peace, when, in 1866, Grant was given a rank equal to the highest conferred upon Washington. This the Union commander held until he became President, when the title passed to General William Tecumseh Sherman, who had, in the mean time, been made a Lieutenant-General, along with General Philip H. Sheridan. The title of General of the Armies of the United States passed to Sheridan on June 1, 1888, and on August 5 of the same year it went out of existence. Lieutenant-generalships continued longer, and major-generalships, with a short intermission, have been continued down to the present day.

There are remarkable phases of the career of "Black Jack" Pershing. Although he had distinguished himself in Cuba and in the Philippines, there appeared to be little hope of his advancement, because of the great number of seniors in his way. In 1906, however, President Roosevelt, in characteristic fashion, in defiance of all usage, and without fear of the long string of seniors and their friends, jumped Pershing from a captaincy to a brigadiergeneralship. He would have made him a Colonel by preference, but the law would not permit him to do this.

If he jumped Pershing at all it must not be to a coloneley. The law said nothing to prevent a captain from being jumped to a brigadiership, and President Roosevelt found pleasure in taking advantage of the neglect, or oversight, of the lawmakers.

Nothing seemed more unlikely, ten years ago, or five years ago, for that matter, than that John J. Pershing would ever be able to rise to a high rank in the army, for no opportunity was in sight. But now we find him with a rank equal to that borne by Washington, Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, not so much because of what he has accomplished as because of the great things expected of him.

While General Bliss, by virtue of his position as the directing head of the entire United States Army organization, takes precedence of General Pershing, nevertheless it is upon the achievements of the man at the front, rather than upon the work of the man at headquarters, that the attention of the nation will be centered.

Notes and Comments

This is how New Zealand is going to do it. If any of the Dominion citizens, who earn more than £700 a year, fail to assume their proper share of the war burden by contributing to future war loans, she is going to assess them with additional heavy taxation. There is need for such a proceeding, if the voluntary plan is to bring an inadequate return, for the conflict has taught, the lesson that while voluntary methods serve in times of peace, in times of war they do not always meet the requirements. New Zealand, like her neighbor Australia, is determined that those who get the benefit of the music shall help to pay the piper.

THINK of that day, perhaps not so far ahead as commonly supposed, when your grocer, your clothier, your shoe retailer, and your coal dealer inform you that prices have fallen, instead of risen. Having had the experience of meeting exigencies arising from the increased cost of everything, the average householder should be able to readjust himself to lower prices with considerable ease.

M. CLÉMENCEAU is not in the Painlevé Cabinet. Probably a man of his standing and experience could only lead and not enter a government. Then, of course, M. Clémenceau's capacities for construction are said by many not to equal his wonderful savoir-faire in the art of criticism. He is said to shun responsibility himself, while making it difficult for others to carry responsibility. However that may be, his denunciation and exposure of the spies and plotters, who were laying their snares under the nose of a really far too complacent Minister of the Interior, is certainly another feather in his cap.

THE future will show if France is once more to be governed by Georges Clémenceau. He would not be exactly popular, but Hervé declares that if it came to it, he would rather see the Tiger in power than Albert Thomas. But then, Hervé thinks that the Socialist Party is proving itself very thoroughly tarred with the Marxian brush. His attitude is anything, even Clémenceau, rather than a Soviet!

RECOGNITION of acts of bravery in these times should not be wholly confined to those engaged in military service. Something, at least, should be done about providing a medal for the writer who prepares the first magazine article without using the word meticulous. The feat seems, of course, a difficult if not an impossible one, but it would be well, at all events to encourage an effort in that direction.

NEWFOUNDLAND, though her population does not exceed that of a populous English industrial city, has sent 10,000 men to fight the battles of the British Empire in this war. It is a magnificent record, and exactly what one would have expected from a country which sent its fishing ships to help in the destruction of the Great Armada. It was in 1583 that Sir Humphrey Gilbert took possession of the island in the name of his "most gracious Lady, Oueen Elizabeth"; it was only five years later that La Felicissima Armada left Corunna for English waters, so that Newfoundland had an early opportunity of establishing a tradition for gallantry which Newfoundlanders are so splendidly vindicating in the present war. The "Antient and Loyale Colony" of Newfoundland is celebrating the four hundred and twentieth anniversary of her discovery, an occasion which is seized by the rest of the Empire to wish her

There is in the New American Army a "Rainbow Division," so-called because it is constituted of military units from all parts of the country. The name "Blue and Gray" is to be given to a division, the twenty-ninth, now forming in Anniston, Ala., because it is made up, about equally, of regiments from the North and the South. Both names were cleverly conceived, and the latter is, perhaps, the happier of the two. The "Blue" and the "Gray" are thoroughly blended in this war.

A Kansas woman of accredited literary taste has sent out a call for all unpublished poems by Kansas poets, her declared purpose being to put such works into a book. The point is at once raised, of course, that there are no poems by Kansas poets that have never been published.

From the ridiculous to the sublime.

The Ridiculous—Henry J. Kaltenbach, reported speaking at a meeting of the New York State Wholesale Liquor Dealers, and apparently making a virtue out of a necessity: "If our own business suffers as a result of the taxes we will not complain, but will take it as our bit toward winning the war."

The Sublime—The same speaker at the same meeting:
"We wholesalers feel there are too many saloons, and we will be glad to see them go out of business"
